Rural Generalist Intern fact sheet

What is different about a Rural Generalist Intern year?

The Rural Generalist Intern Year (RG1) is an intern training model based in small rural and sub-regional hospitals with a variety of clinical experiences including general practice and community settings. It provides medical graduates with an opportunity to commence their postgraduate training in rural Victoria and sets the foundation for any future career.

From the mountains to the coast and in between, a rural generalist intern year will see you individually supported by our regional coordinators and have the ability to plan your career pathway in locations of your choice. All whilst enjoying the most picturesque locations Victoria has to offer.

All of our RG1 positions are advertised through PMCV Victorian Rural Preferential Allocation (VRPA) Intern match.

What are the benefits of a Rural Generalist Intern year?

Undertaking a Rural Generalist Intern year offers numerous benefits, including case management support from a Regional Coordinator and Clinical Lead, as well as valuable training and career pathway advice. You will receive assistance in accessing VRGP-funded training positions and be supported in connecting with Rural Generalist role models and mentors. This program is designed to support you to make informed training and career choices while providing varied clinical exposure across both hospital and primary care settings. A rural generalist intern year lays a fantastic foundation for any career in medicine.
